The Art Museum From Boull E To Bilbao In July 2017, acting on the direction of the Manhattan District Attorney's office, American law enforcement seized an ancient marble sculpture from the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York. The ancient sculpture of a bull's head—later named the Sidon Bull's Head—had been displayed on loan at the museum for seven years. Like a Bull in an Art Museum The bull that played this important role was selected for displaying color patterns, such as a white triangle on the forehead and black patches resembling winged birds on the body. In the ivory figure, the white triangle is indicated by a sunken area on the head, while engravings of a vulture with wings spread and a winged scarab flank an elaborate blanket on the back. Apis Bull Statuette - The Metropolitan Museum of Art This bronze statuette (16x14x6 cm) represents the god Apis - portrayed as a bull with a solar disk between its horns, protected by an uraeus - cobra.
